port were exhausted. It was represented that there were men in their midst who had not tasted meat for months; men who had not received two meals a day for months; others had lived on one meal a day; one man died from starvation. Mr. Michael Ward said, "no one need tell him that he is in the midst of doleful misery; that starvation abounds in every district. Starvation had been sent to their final resting places already. There were some few cases of this kind, but many are actually starving by degrees; they are dying—sacrificed to the happy Union that used to furnish us plenty of employment, and by that employment a sufficiency to purchase the necessities of existence. These creatures, caterpillars upon the cabbage of society, after eating away the best portion of it, were dissatisfied that there was not another for them to destroy."

Let no one suppose that the case of Philadelphia differs from that of any other city or town in the Union. They are all alike, and if the army has been filled with men, born and intended for a better fate, it is because they have been driven to it by the desperation brought on the country by this unnatural war. What do we see here in St. Louis? A complete blockade of all trade, not for any crime committed by us—not for any thing the people of Illinois, or Iowa, or Missouri, or Kansas, or Minnesota, may have done, but for the sake of a ridiculous idea, that it may do us some harm to the revolting States. All trade is at end; and as a consequence the products of the farm are no longer of value, and with the immense crop which God, more mindful of us than we have been of ourselves, has given us, we are almost doomed to see it rot in the fields, for the want of means to carry it, or of a market after it has been saved. —Missouri Republican, July 2.

THE WAR, WHEN REASON RETURNS.—Europe regards the war in the United States, not in its moral aspect, but in its political expediency, as damaging the world's "balance of power" as now adjusted, and in its commercial bearings. It will yet be viewed in the same light on this continent. The people will calculate, eventually, the benefits and burdens of supporting two armies in place of one, and a double navy, and a double Congress. The establishment of custom houses in the heart of the country, and the multiplication of officials, will be an additional burden. War is a game in which leaders sometimes win, but the people always lose. Hereafter the United States Government has been a self-supporting Government. If Secession is permitted to carry its point, and two Governments take the place of the present Government, direct taxation becomes indispensable. It will cost far more to maintain each Government, with its army and navy immensely increased, as they will be, than the whole expense of the present Government. In other words, the people will have two strong Governments, because they will not obey one weak one, and two dear Governments because they will not support one cheap one. If Mr. A. was called upon to support Mr. B., a non-producer, Mr. A. would feel the burthen very great. Yet in war men are made non-producers, and producers must support them. Standing armies are of necessity public pensioners, eating out the substance of the labor of a country. The South may yet look at Secession in this light. —S. F. Bulletin, Aug. 19.

In this contest between a would-be titled aristocracy and the bone and sinew of the great North, there can be but one result. They have passionately and needlessly flung down the gauge of battle—unprovoked and instigated by the basest treachery—to the best Government on earth. Independent of the fact that the total lack of justice in their claims or pretensions to the sympathy of the civilized world, they are physically an inferior race to the Northern—made so by habits and climate—and in the long struggle must go down. History illustrates the fact that the Southrons, all the world over, and in all time, have succumbed before the tread of the Northman. It will be so here.

The principle of democracy—not as understood in our local party issues, but as opposed to kingcraft, aristocracy, and the will of privileged classes—was born among the sleet and snow of the rocky New England coast, and spreading and strengthening, has proclaimed liberty to the Western World. Upon it are founded nearly all of the human freedom that we now enjoy. It was the descendants of the intrepid settlers of those bleak shores, who first opposed the tyranny of England, and whose influence, infused by slow degrees into the less energetic men of the South, gradually wrought them up to signing the Declaration of Independence, after long and earnest debate. One of the signers of the Declaration of Independence—the father of the American Revolution—predicted this struggle, and named the middle of this century for its occurrence. He predicted also its result; it was that which history records for all issues between the Northman and the Southron—the result which, in old England, attended the contests between Cromwell and the vitiated, demoralized courtiers of Charles the First. —Alta California, August 17.

THE WAR.—One of the worst features that surround the present deplorable condition of the country is, the intense spirit of hatred with which many virulent journals of the East seek to stimulate the people, and add the additional horrors of ruthless vengeance to the ordinary calamities of a state of war. Foremost and most unscrupulous among these promoters of a barbarous spirit, is the New York Tribune. This quondam super-humanitarian journal, notorious for its mawkish, milk and water sentimentalities, is now the most truculent inciter of the worst passions that civilization has ever excited. Like most of the press of the East, it is "kill! kill! kill!" It craves, for the gallows, and would have that instrument of government as insatiate as the guillotine during the French reign of terror; and it spreads through the country, with the additional fancy tints of exaggeration, every raw-head and bloody-bones story that itinerant newspaper correspondents pick up or invent, to give a spice of sensation to their generally stupid and contradictory communication.

The aim, in this matter, of all good citizens, particularly those who are placed in the position of influencing a large amount of opinion, should be to check, not foment, the spirit that superadds the savagery of reprisals to the stern necessities of war. Such men as these writers of the Tribune, and others of their kind, are efficient only for making the war spirit more obstinate and ferocious, deluging the advent of peace, and reducing this most unfortunate conflict between two great sections of the American people to the murderous and inseparable strife of Mexican factions. —The Monitor, August 17.

gent Street, to buy him a new coat, was referred by the shopman to the "mitigated affliction department." A tradesman of whom I bought some lamp oil sent it home with Mr. Clark's compliments and solicitations. One man sells "gentlemen" in close proximity to the Bank. They call floor-cloth "kamptulion," and boots "antipolopos," and soap "typophagon," and, though last, not least, a sauce-pan "anheiropheteron." I have tried to show, by these examples, how destructive to our beautiful language, and how foolish it is, to use fine words and expressions in common talk and writing upon common things. "To clothe," says Fuller, "low, creeping matter with high-flown language is not fine fancy, but flat foolery." —Thackeray's Cornhill Magazine.
